

1.

What NOT to feed your rabbit: Rabbits are fond of vegetables, but not all fruits and veggies contain ingredients that are suitable for them.

2. You should definitely limit the amount of calcium-rich veggies and fruits you feed them. Calcium can ultimately cause health complications.

- Absolutely never feed your rabbit cauliflower! This is vital information! They are unable to pass gas and cauliflower will cause them to need to, which puts their lives in danger!!!!
- Any fruits and veggies should be bought from a store and cleaned, rather than picked from your neighborhood or backyard. These backyard harvests often contain hazardous chemicals and pesticides.

1. How Much to Feed Your Rabbit:

This all depends on their size. Small rabbits (2lbs - 6lbs) are fine on about a 1/2 cup to 1 cup daily. Larger than that should have 1 cup daily, possibly a cup and a half if they are over 10 lbs. Ones that are pregnant or nursing kits should always be free fed. Once again, talk with your vet to determine proper food servings for your particular breeds.

2. Where to get Rabbit Food:

Part of taking care of a rabbit, is finding the best food possible. Pellets can be found at any local grain elevator, farm supply store, or pet store. Timothy Hay can often be found in the same location. Often the feed found at grain elevators or farm supply store will be of a higher quality, and the employees will often be more knowledgeable about it.

Caution:

- Absolutely NO Cauliflower!!!

Quick Tips:

- Water is a rabbit's #1 important nutrient!!!
